

Connecting New

May, 2020

This month I share a poem and painting about change. If you are feeling like me, it seems everything is now viewed through the lens of social distancing and the pandemic. I find it interesting that I wrote this poem (and the painting followed shortly thereafter) on January 14 of this year, well before a possible pandemic was on my radar.

Pace

As existence unfolds
one protests that the movement is too fast
and another that it is much too slow and overdue.
Others change outside of the mainstream unnoticed, isolated
while others blaze the trail.
A few manage to resist entirely
yet, I wonder if they realize...
everything that is alive changes...
always.

May we all live into the new life that God is offering.

Peace and Blessings,
Clarence
